Yeah most departments run their own IT. I'd say it's probably being picked up by an off-the-shelf Sophos config or something like that. SAD!

If it's miscategorised, report it to your IT team. If you know what vendor they're using, report to the vendor.

It can be risky telling your leftist IT guy at your leftist-controlled agency that you can't access TheDonald.win on your work computer. When I ran into this problem back in 2016, I got around it by disabling the Crowdstrike software my organization was running by using an image file redirect to a nonexistent debugger (so the app could not ever actually run). One reboot and I had bypassed my organization's entire net nanny and they never knew.

It's in the registry, search for image file execution options, create a key with the same name as the exe you want to redirect with a REG_SZ named "Debugger" and value of 0, no exe with the name of that key will be able to run on your machine anymore.

Ideally, if Sophos (or CrowdStrike, etc.) get enough reports from organisations that it's a false positive, they'll remove it from their rules and it will be unblocked for other people everywhere else. Some content-filtering solutions allow users to report a false positive directly from their browser.

Not worth risking your job over it if you're worried about that sort of thing, though.

1. create "JoeBiden.win" It doesn't have to do much.
2. complain that JoeBiden.Win and other .win sites are blocked.
3. Profit.

After they are unblocked, JoeBiden.win can just redirect to another website. It doesn't have to be TDW.

If a real JBW was actually created, it could be an interesting place to gather information and/or redpill.

Not only would I browse reddit on my gov computer, I'd keep certain threads bookmarked where you can see them every time you open a new tab and I'd keep it that way even if I was training someone new or giving a presentation where I'd share my screen. IDGAF. I do it out of spite to rub it in their faces that I can still get my work done well way ahead of time compared to everyone else and still have time to screw around, meanwhile other employees get the same bonuses I do for doing jack shit and let the union do the heavy lifting of keeping them in their job.

Porn is created largely by the government. It's part of the Mkultra program. Why would Pornhub allow for over a decade for users to download videos for free? Videos that didn't make any of hte uploaders any money. Videos whose editing (PMVs for example) took dozens of hours to make.

The FBI itself referred to the deepstate. They said "shadow government" in reference to the 7th floor group, which was the 7th floor of the state dept, which can only be accessed by essentially CIA nocs embedded in the state dept and people invited there like the president. As i understand the whole floor acts like SCIF-lite Depends on who is running IT agree. If they are left they will make MSNBC the front page and block sites they politically do not like. IT people for some phucking reason love doing this shit. I guess it gives them a sense of power for once in their life.

They do this crap to me at work but I have a virtually undetectable way around it. Essentially I have a server at home running docker containers. One container has DELUGEVPN and privoxy in it. I ssh from work to my home computer, port forward the privoxy port to localhost, and then I use a proxy switcher for Chrome to use my proxy server at home through the ssh tunnel. Your proxy server will be localhost:<forwarded port number>. It works, traffic is encrypted, so it is relatively safe.

Yeah, my work used to blkck me from accessing PSA or any other gun website.

But, I am a Networking engineer and so much smarter than them.

I just installed Tor browser, and was able to browse.

Or you can setup a VPN to tunnel ur traffic.

This masks the dest IP, and just ur 'IT' will not know what dest IP you r going to.

Yeah actually .win has in the past been used for many email spam campaigns so it's default blocked in some systems.

at the tops of their lungs and FOX was forced to say "why the heck are all these people saying IMRAN AWAN???"

I know a fat cuck making bank on doing jackshit in federal contractor gig. He refuses to even look at infowars, obeyed when ordered not to look at Wikileaks, and believes my support of Donald Trump and religion is based on conspiracy theory.

The government is our enemy and so are the all the faggots too busy collecting your money to care about what they're even doing.

I couldn't get on from work last week if I wanted to log in, because the domain for logins is a new domain. I think eventually it'll work, in the meantime I can look but I can't upvote or comment when I'm working.

Try installing a personal VPN you pay for, like Private Internet Access.
